Covid-19 vaccination roll-out accelerates

Only about 12 000 Namibians have gotten the Covid-19 jab so far, with the health minister imploring residents to get vaccinated.

JEMIMA BEUKES
WINDHOEK

Since the roll-out of the Covid-19 vaccination plan, Cabinet members have lined up to take the jab, with health minister Dr Kalumbi Shangula being the latest this week.

President Hage Geingob, who said he would be the first to take the injection, has still not made his way to a vaccination centre, and neither has his second in command, Nangolo Mbumba.

Mbumba, who is 79, said he is ready to take his jab and will soon get it done.

"I have not yet taken it. Remember when the health minister announced, he said those of us over 60 are not advised to take the available vaccine, but now that we have other vaccines, I will go. I think all of us need to be vaccinated if we want our borders to be opened to tourists," he said.

Meanwhile, defence minister Frans Kapofi said he will get his shot around June, since he was diagnosed with Covid-19 in March and was advised to wait 90 days before he gets the vaccine.

Marking the occasion

Kalumbi on Tuesday said he waited for World Immunisation Week to take his vaccination to emphasise the importance of vaccines to Namibians.

"I want to send a clear message on this global occasion to Namibians in the hope that this will convince those who are doubtful and sceptical that Covid-19 vaccines are safe and will protect you and save your life. About 800 million people in the world have already been vaccinated. Let no Namibian be left behind," he said.

His deputy, Dr Ester Muinjangu, was the first minister to get the jab at the start of the vaccination roll-out.

"Namibia is a living testimony of the benefits of mass immunisation. More than a decade ago, Namibia experienced an outbreak of poliomyelitis, which afflicted many people and claimed many lives. We mounted a nationwide immunisation campaign and vaccinated more than 2.2 million people then. As a result, we managed to 'kick polio out of Namibia.' Some of you may still remember the slogan. We aim to repeat the same feat with Covid-19," Shangula said.

Health ministry executive director Ben Nangombe also got the Covid-19 vaccine this week.

id-19, of which 625 have lost their lives to the virus.

Shangula implored Namibians to come forward and take the vaccine as Namibia cannot afford to lose more lives.

By Tuesday afternoon, 11 971 people had been vaccinated.

Cabinet members who got the jab include ministers of finance, lands, justice and public enterprises, Iipumbu Shimi, Calle Schlettwein, Yvonne Dausab and Leon Jooste.

Mines and energy minister Tom Alweendo also got vaccinated recently.

City to conclude CEO search in September

OGONE TLHAGE
WINDHOEK

Windhoek mayor Job Amupanda says the city council hopes to conclude the appointment of a CEO by the end of September.

The City is currently without a CEO following the resignation of Robert Kahimise in November 2020.

"Pursuant to the swearing-in of the new council on 3 December 2020, the recruitment of a substantive CEO remains a primary deliverable aimed at capacitating the organisation to achieve its ambitious objectives of the new council," Amupanda said earlier.

The future CEO would play a critical role in the delivery of services related to socio-economic development, Amupanda explained.

"Windhoek faces significant challenges in terms of economic development, youth unemployment and investment and promotion. It is against these challenges that the council seeks an enthusiastic visionary to head the said department and make a meaningful contribution towards the livelihood of Windhoek's residents," he said.

The new CEO would be required to execute the opposition-led council's programmes, Amupanda said.

"The ideal candidate should be both suitably qualified and experienced. That said and equally important, the incumbent CEO should possess and embrace an innovative and progressive ethos required to execute and operationalise the council's strategic intent," he said.

The Windhoek municipality is currently headed by George Mayumbelo, who also serves as its head for human capital and corporate services.

Advertisements for the position of CEO will be published from 30 April.

Coalition pact

Namibian Sun asked Amupanda whether the conclusion of a coalition agreement would have any bearing on the appointment of the new CEO. No response was received.

The council is yet to pronounce itself on a coalition agreement.

The council has chosen Filemon Hambuda of the Independent Patriots for Change (IPC) as chairperson of its management committee.

In December, Amupanda of the Affirmative Repositioning (AR) movement was elected as mayor, replacing Swapo councillor Fransina Kahungu.

Politicians of the IPC, AR, National Unity Democratic Organisation (Nudo) and PDM were elected to serve on the management committee, excluding councillors from Swapo and the Landless People's Movement (LPM).

JOOSTE DISPELS LEASE LAWSUIT FEARS

WINDHOEK

Public enterprises minister Leon Jooste has given his assurance that government will not be sued over the cancellation of a lease for two Airbus A330 aircraft that had formed part of Air Namibia's fleet.

Government had agreed to a guarantee worth N$2.5 billion to secure the two aircraft. The aircraft never belonged to the national airline and with its liquidation, government is now attending to discussions over the state in which the aircraft will be returned as well as the lease agreement.

Namibian Sun reported in March that American company Castlelake wanted the aircraft returned and that government honour the costly lease agreement.

Jooste dispelled any fears government would face legal action, saying discussions had been ongoing for some time now.

SO LONG: An Airbus 330 aircraft that formed part of Air Namibia's fleet. PHOTO: NAMPA

"We have been negotiating with them since September last year and this is an agreed, controlled redelivery. We have draft heads of terms containing the commercial elements and legal principles whereafter the actual binding contract will be concluded. Government will therefore not be sued," he said.

The guarantee and aircraft are to be treated from Air Namibia's liquidation, Jooste further explained.

"These aircraft are separate from the liquidation as they are backed by full government guarantees. It is not a loan, it's a lease and we are negotiating lease termination and return conditions," he said.

Bailout kings

According to the lease agreement, Air Namibia had to pay N$16 million (US$1.1 million) per aircraft per month, a figure the national carrier could not consistently keep up with.

Government in February announced its intentions to close down the airline, deeming it unaffordable to maintain, while the Namibia Airports Company and Belgian company Challenge Air had applied for Air Namibia's liquidation in the High Court.

The airline, whose liquidation divided public opinion when it was announced, had been bailed out to the tune of nearly N$9 billion over the past decade.

Good cause... The 2021 World Press Freedom Day celebrations, which will be hosted in the capital from today until 3 May, saw institutions aiding the hosting of the event with money, advertising space, technical skills and many other forms of assistance. The day also coincides with the 30th anniversary of the Windhoek Declaration for the development of a free, independent and pluralistic press. Thanking the sponsors on Tuesday, deputy ICT minister Emma Theofelus said Namibia is confident that it will be able to pull off this event because of the input from the 2020 hosts, the Netherlands, and the continued support from local and international organisations and businesses. New Era and other media houses offered advertising space, while Huawei, High Commission of India and Telecom Namibia jumped on board to aid from the technical side. Other sponsors are European Union in Namibia, Konrad-Adenauer-Stiftung, FNB, DBN and the Embassy of Indonesia. Pictured herein are representative of the various sponsors.

Locusts stopped in their tracks

■ Obrein Simasiku

OMUTHIYA – The swarm of locusts observed in the northern areas over the past couple of weeks are said not to have caused major damage to crop fields and grazing land, according to officials and inhabitants.

Not even in Ohangwena region, which was besieged by the swarms of migratory locusts few weeks back, recorded extensive damage – in as much as the situation seemed tense.

The situation was alleviated through community intervention in scaring away the locusts, efforts which were complemented by swift response from the ministry of agriculture’s officials by spraying.

On the other hand, residents were also retaliating by eating the locusts.

The locusts have since disappeared; it is suspected they crossed into Angola, where it is believed they had originated from.

“We do not have cases of locust attacks anymore. Based on our observations in some of the areas we visited, no major damage was ascertained. Only a few crop fields and grazing land was destroyed,” said Ohangwena governor Walde Ndevashiya. Ndevashiya could, however, not be precise on the extent of the damages, saying agriculture officials who are still in the field are undertaking an assessment.

Agriculture spokesperson Jona Musheko shared similar sentiments that destruction was relatively low but could not rule out that some places were extensively damaged.

“Our officials in all four northern regions are still busy with assessments; it’s only then we can exactly know the damage caused once a detailed report is compiled,” said Musheko.

Asked on what interventions are in place to assist the affected communities, Musheko said: “action or relief will be decided upon, based on what will be established; that’s when authorities will sit and decide what sort of help can be offered.”

Reports indicate the ministry has so far spent N$22 million in fighting the grasshoppers.

Similarly, according to authorities and residents, no severe damage was observed in Oshikoto, where the swarm passed through three weeks ago.

“They were first spotted at Ohaiyanda village and proceeded to other places before disappearing. But according to the report, nothing much was lost, although we still look forward to the findings from the agriculture officials,” said Eengodhi constituency councillor Protasius Neshuku.

The locusts also passed through areas in Omuthiya constituency – but due to people’s efforts, they were scared away before feasting on anything.

The same is said for Oshana and Omusati, where there is low destruction. - osimasiku@nepc.com.na

Keetmans CEO placed on ‘administrative leave’

■ Steven Klukowski

KEETMANSHOOP - The Keetmanshoop municipality has placed its CEO, Desmond Basson, on administrative leave for three months, starting 3 May.

In a statement, municipal spokesperson Dawn Kruger said the decision has been taken during a recent special council meeting.

“This meeting was convened to deliberate on the matter of the CEO signing a service level agreement with Maximum Profit Recovery Namibia (Pty) Ltd. on 6 August 2018,” she explained in the statement.

Kruger said the agreement was entered without the co-signature of the then chairperson of the management committee, Gabriel Freyer.

The statement further reads that it seems no council resolution has been taken with regard to the agreement. “The meeting resolved that the CEO, Desmond Basson, be put on administrative leave from 3 May 2021 for three months to allow an unhindered investigation,” she said.

Council has appointed an independent/private consultant to investigate the matter, and it also appointed the senior executive for the Keetmanshoop Electricity Business Unit, Reginald Brandt, as acting CEO for a period of three months, starting from 3 May 2021, with Elvis Mukaya, senior executive: human resources as his alternate.

Kruger gave the assurance that the council is determined to resolve the matter in a lawful and timely manner and ensured stakeholders that operations will continue as normal.

Efforts to get comments from Basson went futile as he is out of town and his mobile number remains unanswered.

The Onguti Senior Secondary School in Oshikoto will extend teaching and learning for two weeks, despite schools having closed nationally last week for the first semester holiday.

The extension was necessitated by the fact that the school did not kick off the academic year on time, due to overflowing sewage problems at the school.

Teaching at the school only started at the beginning of March this year, compared to other public schools which started at the end of January.

Onguti extends teaching into holiday

"We analysed the work we have done since we started, and realised that there are some patches which needed to be covered. In fact, we were unable to start with examinations on 12 April, like the others, because we were still far behind, hence we only started on 26 April," stressed school principal Salomo Ndeshimona.

Upon completion of the examination, Ndeshimona said, they will have another week of teaching and learning, including weekends, especially for grade 12 learners who are doing the new curriculum of advanced subsidiary level.

"We will then release the learners on the 13th of May to enjoy the remainder of the holiday, because by then we are assured that we have covered almost everything for the first semester," he added.

Meanwhile, some parents welcomed the extension, saying it was for the benefit of their children.

"I personally have no problem. We have been informed of the extension and we have no objections to that as it benefits the children. No one can afford and be happy to have a child failing," said one parent, Petrus Nahole.

On the other hand, the principal said he was impressed with the support from parents, hostel staff, learners and some teachers when they were informed of the plans to extend the teaching period.

"Everyone is eager to push an extra mile, even though we have observed a few teachers who are not pleased with the idea. However, that is nothing of concern," stated Ndeshimona. - osimasiku@nepc.com.na

Farmers accuse ministry of dragging its feet

■ Obrein Simasiku

Some farmers who occupy portions of a government resettlement farm in the Oshikoto region, have accused the land reform ministry of dragging its feet when it comes to issuing them with allotment letters meant to confirm their legal ownership.

The authorities are yet to issue the concerned farmers with allotment letters, nearly eight months after land occupation at farm Oerwoud was resolved.

Last year, the ministry resolved to allocate certificates to 151 individuals to end land disputes and resettlement chaos at both Oerwoud and Tsintsabis.

The land ministry has not issued allotment letters to the occupants for the past 28 years, due to confusion over who was legally resettled in 1992 when government bought the farms. Tsintsabis has since been declared a settlement.

Many farmers were illegally resettled by traditional leaders, while others bought portions of land from those originally resettled on the farm.

This act is prohibited, as the law only permits the minister of land to resettle individuals. Farm Oerwoud is situated some 50km outside Tsumeb on the Tsumeb-Mpungu road.

"I have been resettled on this farm for over 15 years, and to date nothing has happened. Some of us were legally resettled after following due processes. I am a progressive farmer but cannot expand on my farming, because I can't access any funding as there is no proof that I am resettled on that land," said Edward Amadhila who runs a poultry project, horticulture and cattle farming.

"No matter how I have tried to apply for funding from various institutions by attaching properties in Tsumeb, it still boils down to who owns the land."

Last year it was resolved to grant property rights to farmers resettled on the piece of land as part of phase one, while phase two would address issues of those resettled illegally or given land through the local traditional authority.

Land reform director for resettlement and regional programme implementation Alfred Sikopo told New Era the Land Advisory Commission advised the ministry to complete the second phase as well, so that they can look into the two issues comprehensively.

Explaining the situation, Sikopo said they are now busy drafting the programme on how to tackle the second phase which involves verification and fact-finding of who the owners are of the land, as some settled illegally while others bought the land.

"That is the only hold up; else we could have perhaps completed phase one. They advised us to compile everything so that they look into the issues once and for all than in little pieces. Phase two was addressing problematic land issues," he said.
