Gardiner triumphs as US men endure day to forget

Steven Gardiner of the Bahamas won the Olympic 400 metres title on Thursday but it was the failure of the formerly all-conquering American men that was talk of the Tokyo track after another dire day for one half of the sport's superpower.

US men won the 400m seven times in a row, culminating in two podium

It should be a shock when the United States mess up the men's sprint relay but it is becoming so common from the nation that utterly dominated the event for 70 years that it is now almost expected.

Despite having a team dripping with speed, ragged changeovers left them sixth in their heat and out of the final. The performance led to an Nageotte needed a three attempts to clear her pole vault opening height of 4.50 metres but her clearance of 4.90 at the second attempt was enough to secure victory ahead of Russian Anzhelika Sidorova and Holly Bradshaw, the Briton with a long history of finishing just outside the medals in major events.

Botswana's hopes of gold revived as Amos is reinstated

Botswana's Nijel Amos will run in the Olympic 800m final after all.

Despite a dramatic fall in Sunday's semifinal, which saw the 27-year-old tumbling to the track and limping home in last place in 2:38.49, Amos has been reinstated in the race and handed a place in Wednesday's final, which will now feature nine athletes instead of eight.

The Botswana star, who boasts the fastest time this year over two laps of 1:42.91, and American Isaiah Jewett got tangled up mid-race but provided one of the indelible images of the Games when they helped each other up from the track and crossed the finish line together.

Speaking directly after the fall, and thinking he was out of contention, Amos had said: "I still can't put my head around it. I am crazy about it, but that is 800m. These things happen."

As for crossing the line with Jewett, he added: "At the end of the day it is all about 'united by emotion', as people say." Jewett added: "I don't want any bad blood because that's what heroes do, they show their humanity through who they are and show that they're good people."

Officials later ruled that Amos had been impeded by Jewett, meaning he'll be able to contest for a second Olympic medal after the silver he claimed as an 18-year-old at London 2012.

After being reinstated, Amos posted his response on Twitter, saying: "I wrote this message on the wall at the dressings room after thinking my time here at the Olympics was over. God had other plans and he indeed prepared a seat for me at the final dinner."

That "final dinner" will also include the likes of world championship bronze medallist Ferguson Rotich, Emmanuel Korir, who has the second best time in the world this year – both from Kenya – and the third-ranked Clayton Murphy of the USA. The 800m has been dominated by world record-holder David Rudisha at the two previous Olympics, but the Kenyan was not able to make it to Tokyo because of persistent injury.

Amos's silver in London, in that famous race in which Rudisha shattered the world record, remains Botswana's solitary Olympic medal in 10 previous editions of the Games. -SUPERSPORTS

Wayde van Niekerk on 400m semi-final: I expected way more from myself

CAPE TOWN – If you looked closely at Wayde van Niekerk's start in the 400m semi-final at the Tokyo Olympics on Monday, you would have noticed that he was almost stuck in his blocks.

And the official system proves that his reaction time was 0.381 of a second, way behind the winner of the race, Steven Gardiner of the Bahamas, who took just 0.152 of a second to get up and go – that's more than two-tenths of a second that was lost by the South African star.

So, Van Niekerk was on the back foot from the start, and despite charging Niekerk, and that spot was claimed by American Michael Norman in 44.52, with Botswana's Isaac Makwala also advancing to the final with third place in 44.59.

It was a sad end to the defence of his title, that unforgettable run from lane eight at Rio 2016, where he broke Michael Johnson's record by producing a remarkable time of 43.03.

The 29-year-old South African was in a positive mood after his heat on Sunday, where he had run 45.25, saying "I feel good", although he admitted that he had to deal with nerves before the race.

But IOL Sport understands that Van Niekerk is now considering getting involved with the SA 4x100m relay team, who lost one of their top figures, Gift Leotlela, to a hamstring injury.

Leotlela clocked 10.03 in his 100m semi-final on Sunday, but pulled up just before the finish line, and confirmed to IOL Sport on Monday that he had suffered a grade two hamstring tear, and would not be able to participate in the relay – which starts with the heats on Thursday.

Akani Simbine will head up the Team SA quest for a medal, along with

Joan Laporta: Messi's new deal would have risked club's future

Barcelona trying to keep Lionel Messi could have put the club at risk for 50 years, says president Joan Laporta.

Messi, 34, is leaving because they could not afford to give him a new contract under La Liga's salary limit.

A private equity firm wanted to invest in La Liga, which could have made signing Messi possible, but would have meant Barca giving up some TV rights.

"I can't make a decision that will affect the club for 50 years," Laporta said.

"The club is over 100 years old and it's above everyone and everything, even above the best player of the world. We will always thank him for everything he's done for us.

"In order to have fair play, we need to do this or make an effort which would put the club at risk. We couldn't keep going with this and we needed to make a decision, which we have."

Messi, Barcelona's all-time leading goalscorer, had agreed a new five-year contract on reduced wages - but the club still had to slash their wage bill to afford him, and were unable to do so.

"Leo wanted to stay, so he's not happy," Laporta said. "We all wanted him to stay. For him, he has to confront reality. It's a reality that can't be changed and he knows I wish him the best wherever he goes."

Laporta added that he did not want to give "false hope" on "hypothetical" ideas that would see keeping Messi possible. "This negotiation has ended," he said.

Paris St-Germain have begun to explore the feasibility of signing Messi.

'There will be a before and after Leo'

Messi is Barcelona's record scorer with 672 goals and has won 10 La Liga titles, four Champions Leagues and the Copa del Rey seven times, as well as claiming the Ballon d'Or on a record six occasions.

"Leo's legacy is excellent. He's made history," Laporta said. "He's the player with the most success in history of the club."

"He's been the reference of an era which has been splendid. The best era of Barca's history until today.

"A new era starts now. There will be a before and after Leo. We need to be eternally thankful to him."

Laporta revealed that the aim had been for Messi to stay for two more years - even though he had agreed a five-year deal.

"Obviously it's sad the situation is what it is - that with Covid, we can't pay homage to him in a way we would have wanted to do in two years with fans in the stands.

"We were all thinking two years and then if he wanted more we could negotiate. We wanted the post-Messi era to start in two years. Taking into account the circumstances, we've had to bring it forward."

'Messi is in shock... PSG the only option' - how a dramatic day unfurled

SPANISH FOOTBALL WRITER GUILLEM BALAGUE

For the first hour, I was in denial because it's a story of twists and turns, the club and player have worked really hard to make it happen. I thought Barcelona were putting pressure on La Liga.

There is the limit in wages that La Liga forces on teams. Barca have a huge debt.

I thought 'no - this can't be everything finishing here'. But it is finishing here. I am saying that having read through the public note and phone calls, I found out that it has been a strange day.

Messi and his father and agent Jorge Messi came to Barcelona for the confirmation that a new contract was going to be signed. Everything had been agreed for three weeks.

But president Joan Laporta told Jorge Messi they had looked into the detail, not only of the contract but of the new financial deal La Liga have reached [with private equity firm CVC] and 15% of that money can go to wages.

They saw this was not enough to beat financial fair play. It cannot be done.

A lot of the players Barcelona wanted to get rid of don't want to go. Antoine Griezmann, Jordi Alba, Gerard Pique, all that is not happening. It means even though Messi had reduced his wages by 50%, Barcelona cannot afford him.

The plan was for him to earn 20m euros next season, and not be the best-paid player for Barcelona. If that is the case, why did Laporta want to meet on Thursday to sign a new contract?

Messi is in shock - PSG seems to be the only option. A league not so competitive, where he can rest and prepare for the World Cup and then go to the United States. It has to be PSG.

It will take a while to get over this. It is Barcelona saying: 'We are going a different direction, not putting pressure on La Liga.' It's very difficult to take.

Bank launches donate-a-meal for health workers

• BY STAFF REPORTER

NEDBANK Namibia has collaborated with the Lithon Foundation, 3Measures, Co-Feed Namibia, Ogilvy and PayToday to launch the 'Nedbank Donate-a-Meal: Help a Health Worker' nationwide campaign.

The campaign aims to galvanise national support through the creation of a donation platform via the PayToday app.

The Bank donated N$100 000 to kick-start the meal programme for critical staff at the Katutura State Hospital and Robert Mugabe Clinic in Windhoek.

The programme will be extended to other hospitals and clinics in the country as fundraising efforts continue.

Meals will be prepared by local restaurants, which in turn is support for small businesses, who too have been greatly affected by the public health regulations.

As Namibia battles the third wave, healthcare workers remain at the forefront of treating and caring for patients with Covid-19 across the country. One week ago, healthcare workers accounted for four percent of the total confirmed cases of Covid-19.

Without a doubt, medical professionals work under immense pressure and have borne the brunt of the pandemic in more ways than one. Not only do they save lives and care for severely ill patients, but must further bear the physical and mental stress of heavy workloads and full hospitals.

They carry the high risk of becoming infected with the virus themselves - to date 0.6 percent of the total deaths due to Covid were healthcare workers.

"The health crisis underscores the essential and often under-valued role of healthcare workers which is the source of inspiration for Nedbank's humanitarian campaign. The campaign seeks to mitigate some of the daily frontline challenges healthcare workers face while selflessly dedicating their lives to help combat the impact of Covid-19 amongst those in critical care at state hospitals.

"Due to the strenuous nature of work and the long hours, Covid-19 frontline workers often find very little time to nourish themselves with sufficient daily nutrition," said Gernot de Klerk, head marketing and communication at Nedbank.

Nedbank and their partners intend to ensure adherence to high-impact project management, monitoring, delivery and evaluation of this important initiative.

"Our healthcare workers have been selfless in their daily labour of love; the very least we can do is come together to support them in small meaningful ways," said Chris Botha from PayToday. The PayToday app will enable more Namibians to get involved and demonstrate their gratitude to those who have held and continue to hold the frontlines," added de Klerk.

Marsia Red from Lithon Foundation said as a nation we need to be proud of ourselves to have dedicated men and women that are serving the nation with pride in fighting Covid-19 pandemic.

"Namibia can be proud of those who went to work every day and stood in the line of fire, serving our community with love and hope. Lithon Foundation is inspired by the level of humanity and caring they have shown during this pandemic. We believe if you light a lamp for someone else, it will brighten your own path, and we call upon this great nation to join this valiant and joint effort, to make a difference," said Reed.

Nedbank Namibia invites interested parties to join the cause to ensure the sustainability of this crucial national initiative. Members of the public and other corporate partners can donate directly on the PayToday app under the Nedbank Donate-a-Meal account and nominate their preferred hospital.
