SA health & vaccination

SOUTH Africa's health authorities have started vaccinating the homeless of the country's most vulnerable communities, with one-dose vaccines to ensure full protection against the coronavirus.

It's estimated that around 10 million homeless people live in South Africa which is a vulnerable community that's been hit extra hard by Covid-19 pandemic due to harsh outdoor environment and higher rate of preexisting health conditions.

"[For] the homeless people it's been a very tough time. Especially in the winter, they're very susceptible to flu and colds. And what we may have co-morbidities like TB for example or diabetes and they may have HIV, these are serious issues, which then can be furthered by something like Covid-19," said Reverend Annie Kirtland of The Hope Exchange, a government-led organization that provides services to street homeless people. "Thirty-one-year-old Raymond Magadui is one of the first homeless people in Cape Town vaccinated."
