WHAT THEN? ...

The world's historic pivot toward curbing carbon emissions is likely to spur unprecedented demand for some of the most crucial metals used to generate and store renewable energy in a net-zero emissions by 2050 scenario. A resulting surge in prices for materials, such as cobalt and nickel, would bring boom times to some economies that are the biggest exporters - but soaring costs could last through the end of this decade and could derail or delay the energy transition itself.

Women micro entrepreneurs certified

• SHANTE MAHALIE

THE gender ministry trained women in the basics of entrepreneurship last week, in an effort to break the spell of dependency, encourage the registration of formal businesses, as well as participation in tenders.

This was done through the ministry's Acceleration of Women-Owned Micro-Enterprises (AWOME) programme, through its partnership with the United Nations and the De Beers Group of Companies.

Explaining its mandate, executive director in the ministry Esther Lusepani says the programme provides comprehensive support to women micro entrepreneurs, which entails training on a package called Improve Your Business (IYB).

This package is further complemented by coaching aimed at improving women's business acumen.

"The IYB training package consists of six sets of manuals, including: planning for your business, costing, buying, stock control, record keeping, marketing, as well as people and productivity," says Lusepani.

The programme is designed to provide women micro entrepreneurs with the ability to grow their businesses through different aspects of business and life skills training, as well as to increase the capacity of Namibian women's business associations, says Lusepani.

Programme trainer Anastasia Shivuya says trainers in the AWOME programme mobilised themselves to train women in their various businesses.

Lusepani encourages more women entrepreneurs to register their businesses with the Business and Intellectual Property Authority (Bipa), Social Security, the Ministry of Finance and other relevant local authorities.

"This enables you to participate in the public procurement process in order to reap the general benefits of business registration," she says.

"It is important to note that the AWOME Namibia programme is expanding in terms of training packages. Our trainers have been capacitated to deliver training in other modules such as, the Generate Your Business Idea (GYBI) and Start Your Business (SYB) packages," she says.

"The programme will be in a position to deliver training and support to entrepreneurs whose businesses are at various stages in 2022.

In 2019, the president of the African Development Bank, Akinwami Adesina, said smart nations invest in women, as "women are more bankable".

He quoted available data suggesting that the African continent has a US$42 billion financing gap between men and women, leaving 70% of women excluded financially.

Adesina said despite the fact that women are bankable, and are the majority of farmers in Africa, they face a financing gap of close to US$16 billion (NS340 billion).

The bank's president added that 90% of women pay back their loans, "yet, there exists globally close to US$1.5 trillion (NS22 trillion) financing gap for women-led small and medium sized enterprises."

"Smart nations [ought to] invest in women," he said.

The Management Tip Learning Should Be a Daily Practice

NO matter what industry you're in or how long you've been in it, the ability to learn is an essential skill.

It's not as simple as acquiring knowledge though, rather it's the regular practice of trying out new things and seeing the world in new ways.

Conduct experiments as part of your daily work, whether it's using a new productivity tool or trying out a new approach to meetings. Keep a log where you track the experiments you're running and reflect on what you're learning along the way.

You might also look for opportunities to learn from others. Set a goal of having one "curiously coffee" each month, virtually or in person, with someone you haven't met before. This might be someone in a different department who will help you view your organisation through a new lens or someone in your profession at another company who could broaden your knowledge.

You can also make learning a team activity. Try a weekly or monthly skill's swap, where people can share a skill they're happy to help others learn.

Stock shortages lower new vehicle sales

• MATTHEW DLAMINI

A TOTAL of 714 new vehicles were sold in Namibia during the month of October 2021, compared to 767 sold in the prior month and 561 sold a year ago.

This is according to figures Simons Storm Securities obtained from the National Association of Automobile Manufacturers South Africa and released on Friday.

"Vehicle sales increased by 27,3% y/y and decreased by 6,9% m/m in October 2021," said Simons.

A total of 7 935 vehicles have been sold year-to-date in Namibia, of which the top five brands accounted for 71,5% (5 673 vehicles).

Year-to-date, Toyota (37%), Volkswagen (15%), Ford (7%), Nissan (7%) and KIA (5%) continue to dominate the local vehicle market in terms of market share.

The annual increase was mainly driven by increased purchases of passenger and light commercial vehicles, accounting for 49,9% and 41,3% of sales during October.

"During October, extra-heavy commercial vehicles saw the largest annual increase in vehicle sales rising by 75,0% y/y from 20 to 35 units," said Simons Storm.

The report added that sales of light commercial vehicles rose by 35,9% y/y from 217 to 295 units, while passenger vehicles rose 19,5% y/y from 208 to 356 units and medium commercial vehicles rose by 22,2% y/y from 18 to 22 units.

Local dealerships indicated that vehicle sales would be significantly higher if only stock was available.

The non-availability of stock and delayed delivery times for important vehicles could potentially also weigh on instalment credit uptake by both individual and corporate customers.

According to Simons, Toyota - Japan's biggest carmaker - has cut global production for November by as much as 15% (between 100 000 and 150 000 cars), with company representatives blaming the ongoing global shortage of microchips used in the production of vehicles.

Toyota cut production in September and October as well.

"Component shortages resulted from Covid-19 infections among factory staff and lockdown-related restrictions in Malaysia and Vietnam, which lowered their production."

"In our report last month, we mentioned that Toyota Namibia has seen an increase in its backlog from 300 to 350 vehicles. In other words, customers who have paid deposits are still waiting for their new cars to be delivered in Namibia since early this year," said Simons Storm.

In 2021, Volkswagen celebrates 70 years of production in South Africa, where the first vehicle to roll off the Uitenhage production line was a Beetle in 1951.

"Similar to other brands globally, the manufacturing plant in Uitenhage is experiencing a production backlog, implicating our local dealerships in Namibia," said Simons.

Imports of Volkswagen models are delayed due to the shortage of cargo ships and containers, leading to local dealerships taking a cutback on their allocated orders.

Market expectations are that constrained supply of new vehicles will remain unchanged until mid-next year.

Dealerships with a short supply of most model ranges for both passenger and commercial ranges have lost a market share, as some impatient customers take what is available elsewhere instead of waiting for imports to arrive.

In terms of pricing, Volkswagen has seen price increases every three months of between 1,5% and 2% on average in Namibia during 2021.

Tragic... The accident scene where Denis Pansen Kashona (19) died while he tried to run across the road on Friday after allegedly stealing a bucket of vetkoek from a nearby house.

7 die on Erongo roads in two days

■ Eveline de Klerk

WALVIS BAY - Erongo police have called on residents and visitors to exercise caution on the region's roads after seven people died in two days in two separate accidents.

Inspector Ileni Shapumba on Saturday said four occupants of a seven-seater died on Friday evening near Usakos when the vehicle collided with a double-cab laura bakkie.

He explained that the seven-seater with seven occupants was travelling from Windhoek to Walvis Bay when they collided with the pick-up of two Brazilian nationals who were travelling from Arandja towards Usakos. "Four occupants of the seven-seater, including the driver, died on the spot. The other three occupants sustained serious injuries and were taken to hospital in Windhoek for treatment," he added.

The Brazilians sustained slight injuries.

Meanwhile, two people also died on Thursday when the driver of another seven-seater lost control over the vehicle when a rear tyre burst between Karibib and Okahandja.

"One passenger died at the scene, while the second passenger passed away in an ambulance on the way to Windhoek for treatment. The driver is in a critical condition, and is receiving treatment in the Katutura State Hospital.

The deceased have been identified as Elzabe Tinas (29) and Selma Kalimbo (47).

The seventh person died on Friday morning when he allegedly grabbed a bucket of vetkoek from a house in Kalwibmond and tried to run across the road to Narraville.

He was hit by an NDF vehicle.

"We can analyse information in these accidents, including the one in which a person lost his life in Walvis Bay yesterday morning. The statistics also reflect that most of these persons who lost their lives were young people. Conversely, we have observed a bad trend of drunken drivers arrested on our roads, particularly in Walvis Bay and Swakopmund," Shapumba stated.

He observed that traffic volumes are expected to increase as the festive season approaches.

"We are reminding all road users, including young drivers, to exercise caution, exhibit a sense of responsibility, and to drive alert. Our roads should, as they are intended for, serve as a means to take us all to our destinations safely. This is possible when we act responsibly through strict compliance with the rules on the roads, driving within the speed limit, ensuring vehicle fitness at all times, and driving safely," the officer appealed.

Fight continues... Mike Nghipunya

Nghipunya to wait for constitutionality challenge

■ Maria Amakali

Former National Fishing Corporation of Namibia (Fishcorp) CEO Mike Nghipunya was last week dealt a double blow by the courts when two cases he is involved in were postponed.

He has to wait for 11 more weeks to argue his constitutional challenge against parts of the Criminal Procedure Act (CPA).

Nghipunya was also before Judge Shamana Uetele in the High Court, fighting to be released on bail, pending the finalisation of the multi-million-dollar Fishcorp bribery scandal. That matter was also postponed on Friday to run from 24 to 28 January, 31 January to 4 February and 21 to 25 February 2022.

According to Nghipunya's affidavit, he was hoping the constitutional challenge would be finalised before his bail hearing as he wanted the court to consider him for bail without making use of section 61 in the CPA, which gives the court authority to refuse bail to accused persons on grounds of the administration of justice or public interest.

But judge Thomas Manuho relayed the view of Judge-President Petrus Damsch, who had said the constitutionality challenge should be heard by a full bench of judges. This case was thus postponed until 31 January 2022.

In his application, Nghipunya is seeking a review and setting aside of a section in the CPA containing those words, declaring it unconstitutional, null and void, and of no force and effect in law.

According to him, the words unduly place an unreasonable limitation to his rights in Articles 7, 10, 11, 12, 22, 24 and 25 of the Namibian Constitution, and they exceed the limits of a constitutionally compliant law. Nghipunya also wants the court to review and set aside section 61 in the CPA. The State has indicated it will oppose the application.

Nghipunya is in police custody following his arrest in February 2020 on charges of fraud, contravening the Anti-Corruption Act and corruptly using an office for gratification, as well as money laundering.

He is charged alongside former fisheries minister Bernhard Enas, former minister of justice Sackey Shanghala, former Investor Asset Management Namibia managing director James Hatusikalipi, Enas's son-in-law Tamson Hatusikalipi and Pius Mwatelulo.

The prosecution is alleging Nghipunya, alongside Enas, Shanghala and James used their offices or positions in a public body to obtain gratification and gain millions paid to them or entities of their choice between August 2014 and December 2019.

He has since denied the allegations. mamakali@nepc.com.na

Oniipa CEO disputes legality of suspension

... says he is not going anywhere

■ Obein Simaiku

The CEO of Oniipa Town Council, Justus Jakob, has refused to budge despite being suspended by council late Tuesday afternoon, arguing that the meeting at which he was relieved of duties was illegal and unprecedented.

Jakob said he will not go anywhere and as it stands, according to him, he still remains the legitimate CEO, further saying his alleged removal is just a plot. His suspension was confirmed by mayor David Kamboonde as well as management committee (MC) chairperson Jefet August, who Jakob has accused of a witch-hunt.

Jakob, who has been the CEO of Oniipa since 2014, was suspended indefinitely with all benefits to pave way for an investigation into allegations of corruption relating to an electrical servicing tender that was awarded in 2020.

"Council through its special meeting resolved to suspend the CEO because the allegations levelled against him are very serious. Even though he was refusing the suspension claiming that it is being done unconstitutionally. But we informed him that when he signed and agreed to enter into the electrical tender agreement, it was done unconstitutionally, as council was not aware. The same applies when he breached the agreement to which he committed himself," said MC chairperson August.

"So, he is suspended with all benefits pending the finalisation of the investigation. Once we are done, the suspension will be lifted but we have informed the minister accordingly in this regard," he added.

However, the CEO hit back. "The mayor indicated that the council was indeed bolstered by the management committee and he could not do anything about it. The mayor and his present councillors were questioned on the legality of their meeting and whether the MC has legitimate power to suspend the CEO but could not answer. The mayor could also not answer apparently the question whether the suspension was consented by the minister," Jakob countered.

The tender to provide electrical services was awarded to West Trading CC, which sought financial assistance from Namibia Procurement Fund (NamPro Fund).

However, NamPro Fund had a cessation agreement with West Trading relating to a financing scheme, which was awarded to the contractor as start-up capital. This deal has since gone sour after Oniipa Town Council, under the stewardship of Jakob, breached such a contract and paid monies directly to the contractor, in contrast to NamPro Fund as initially agreed.

Part of the condition was that Oniipa Town Council pays all dues to NamPro Fund's account, which will then advance whatever remains to West Trading.

It is alleged that it is the breach of that specific clause that landed Jakob in hot water as he approved funds to be paid to West Trading. NamPro Fund is now suing West Trading and its director, while Oniipa Town Council is listed as a defendant.

The breach amounted to NS448 149.24 on 18 November 2020, as well as another amount of NS200 000 advanced into West Trading account on 24 November. While the initial tender was for over NS1 million.

In his defence, through a 1 800-word letter provided to the media, Jakob said allegations levelled against him are baseless.

Instead, he accused August of spearheading a witch-hunt and trying to taint his professional image.

"This is an internal administrative issue that through his political immaturity went to the extent of politicising and publicising it in the public domain - a conduct which is in contravention with the Code of Conduct of Members of Local Authority Councils of April 2015.

"The council was advised to wait until the legal route of the case is exhausted by the court, but the MC chairperson decided to bulldoze other councillors to peruse an investigation in the project of West Trading CC. I will leave council when it's the right time. I was appointed by council with prior approval of the minister and not by the MC chairperson," he stressed.

Jakob revealed their long standing difference stems from clashes when he refused to allow councillors to use council vehicles to attend SWAPO meetings, also for refusing to concede to directives of employing people from outside before according the opportunities internally.

Others, include the extension of an internship programme, as well as matters related to procurement, including issues of land compensation and the interference into administrative operations.

Ithete calls for speedy realisation of SEZs

■ Staff Reporter

Swapo parliamentarian Ntawgwé Ithete has called for speedy implementation of special economic zones.

He said once implemented, Namibia will become independent from other economies and achieve its aspirations of industrialisation, economic diversification, and development.

Ithetematrically in parliament on Tuesday while contributing to the mid-term budget review tabled by finance minister Iipumbu Sitimi earlier this month where he announced NS2.2 billion has been made available for reallocation.

Ithete said the medium-term budgetary review does not only facilitate the monitoring/providing benchmark against budgetary developments over time but it also helps ensure fiscal discipline by making more apparent the impact of policies on the government balance in the coming years.

"I welcome the review because although the country has experienced its worst economic downturn, we continue to thrive and grow with limited revenue," he said.

He said the reallocations of funds to the health ministry to boost the country's Covid response and to the anti-poaching activities as well as support the operations of Namibia Wildlife Resorts (NWR) is crucial.

He said these reallocations are crucial to the recovery of the economy and ensure that Namibia is ready to face another wave of Covid-19 is to come. He said during the first and second quarters of 2021, Namibia's economic environment was confronted by numerous macroeconomic shocks as well as the Covid-19 pandemic that inflicted the entire global economy.

Besides the loss of lives, Ithete said the pandemic destabilised the economy through disruptions in trade, tourism, production, productivity, supply chains, and other various integration mechanisms.

Additionally, he said the real GDP has also contracted in the first and second quarters of 2021.

With regard to the domestic economy, Ithete said the impact of the pandemic has transmitted through trade and tourism restrictions, low commodity demand, and international commodity prices.

He said the contraction in the economy was observed across all sectors. Furthermore, he said, Covid-19 did not only affect the domestic economy but also the trade balance, as the country continues to experience a trade deficit although the total trade has improved over the two quarters.

"It is imperative that even during these trying times, we remain resilient and continue with the implementation of development policies and strategies to ensure that not only the GDP of the country improves but also increase the productivity and government earnings," he said.
