Zodwa Wabantu stuns Mzansi after admitting to having 11 abortions

IHARARE

In the recent episode of Zodwa Wabantu's reality show, "Zodwa Wabantu: Uncensored", the dancer left viewers speechless after she confessed that she terminated 11 pregnancies.

According to the dancer, she was approached by a "mysterious man" who told her that she had to buy clothes for her children.

After she questioned the man concerning the message he had delivered to her, she was told it meant that she either had a miscarriage or an abortion.

She was told a cleansing ceremony was supposed to be performed to appease the spirits of the "departed children".

The man said: "If a child passed away because of a miscarriage you need to acknowledge and cleanse that child. That child is also treated as a child that is living."

He added that it was important for one to acknowledge, cleanse and speak to these children.

While shopping for clothes in preparation for the cleansing ceremony, Wabantu revealed that in her lifetime she had terminated about 11 pregnancies.

Wabantu said: Me to you, the number of abortions I have done in my entire life is about 11."

Since she did not know the gender of any of the foetuses, she decided to buy a mixture of colours – blues, pinks and yellows.

Wabantu and the sangoma then prepared sweets, biscuits and milk for the departed children.

Wabantu's confession left many viewers speechless, some saluted her honesty, while others said it was merely an attempt to get content and attention.

Save money monthly by being more organised, says this expert

NICOLE ANZIA

Home organisation has been turned into an art form by social media influencers who share beautifully curated images of pantries arranged by colour or linens tucked neatly into labelled baskets.

There is a full-blown obsession with organising. But all of this ignores the root of the problem. It's not that we need to organise our junk to make it prettier. It's that we need to buy less stuff to begin with.

People seem to be shopping constantly, buying whatever appeals to them without a second thought, whether it's clothes, home accessories, kitchen gadgets, make up or sports equipment. It's common for people to have so much that they forget or can't find what they have, so they buy more, only to discover the duplicate later. It's a vicious cycle.

1. What is all this stuff?

I frequently go into clients' homes, and as they show me around, they'll usually open a few closets and say:

"I have no idea what's in here." Or they'll explain that they couldn't find the box of printer paper they bought last month, or their hammer or stapler, so they bought another one. This seems harmless, but when it becomes routine, it creates organisation problems.

Begin by taking a look around to see what you have, what you need, what you like and what you can get rid of.

Periodically taking a basic inventory and purging will help you make more informed shopping decisions and will help eliminate repeat purchases. You don't have to inventory your entire household at once; break it into manageable categories, such as kitchen appliances or winter clothes, then identify what you use regularly and what can go.

Also consider which belongings bring you joy and which ones you wouldn't miss if they were gone.

Do clothes and shoes make you happy, or do you prefer the items you brought back from a trip or inherited from a family member? Are your books your most prized possessions? Knowing the answers to these questions will help you set priorities and stay focused when shopping.

2. Shop with intention

Our shopping habits are complex. Some people buy items because they're on sale or come highly recommended. Other people think it's necessary to stock up on almost everything "just in case," or because they're not sure whether they own something already. And other people shop because it makes them happy. Whatever the reason, the excitement usually doesn't last long. New items make people happy momentarily, then they become part of the mountain of stuff we find overwhelming.

Shopping mindfully - instead of impulsively or compulsively - will save you money and liberate you from the time required to organise, clean and manage the constant churn of items coming into and going out of your home.
