

City Press

Search

Friday, 19 June
Add location

HOME NEWS POLITICS VOICES SPORT BUSINESS TRENDING LIFESTYLE

18 Jun

Botswana saws off horns to save rhinos from poachers

City Press

Bloomberg
SHARE

The government said that at least 56 of the animals had been killed by poachers in the past two years, marking the worst onslaught since Botswana's black rhino population was wiped out in 1992 and the number of white rhinos dropped to just 27. Picture: iStock/ AOosthuizen

NEWS

Ad Shand

Botswana began removing the horns from its rhinos and moving them away from the iconic Okavango Delta as an unprecedented poaching crisis threatens their survival in the country.

The government said that at least 56 of the animals had been killed by poachers in the past two years, marking the worst onslaught since Botswana's black rhino population was wiped out in 1992 and the number of white rhinos dropped to just 27.

MOST READ

EDITOR'S CHOICE

- 1 Herman Mashaba: SA needs death penalty for murder and rape
- 2 Axed staff sue Lindiwe Sisulu for R20m
- 3 Ban advertising and increase price of alcohol to curb the abuse, experts say
- 4 Ndabeni-Abrahams returns from suspension, walks into a new storm
- 5 Tshegofatso Pule's last words: 'I want to come back home'

Latest issue

June 2020

All the news from City Press.

Read now

The message that rhinos have been dehorned must be spread far and wide

Mmadi Reuben

Dehorning, an exercise in which the horns are removed using chainsaws to render the animals valueless to illegal hunters, will "combat poaching and safeguard the future of this species", the Botswana Ministry of Environment, Natural Resources, Conservation and Tourism said in a statement. Tourism accounts for a fifth of the country's economy.

The size of Botswana's rhino population is a closely guarded secret. Official documents show that there were 153 white rhinos living in the wild by 2014, while private reserves had some black rhinos.

An additional 87 rhinos were brought in last year from South Africa. Analysts say the number of rhinos in the delta, where almost the entire wild population lives, has dwindled to a handful.

Crime syndicates

The Okavango Delta, a vast wildlife sanctuary and Botswana's biggest tourist attraction, is under threat from crime syndicates which use the waterways and the lack of border patrols to hunt rhinos.

Previous wildlife intelligence indicated that poaching was led by liberation war veterans from Namibia and Zimbabwe who had ties to Asian networks.

The dehorning programme will be accompanied by increased anti-poaching operations, said Mmadi Reuben, the principal veterinary officer of the department of wildlife and national parks.

"The message that rhinos have been dehorned must be spread far and wide," he said in a video distributed on social media by the government this week. — Bloomberg

City Press

Delivering the news you need

-  +27 11 713 9001
-  news@citypress.co.za
-  www.citypress.co.za
-  69 Kingsway Rd, Auckland Park

Related Links

Covid-19: Botswana Parliament endorses 6-month state of emergency

Government has decided to ease regulations and allow restaurants, beauticians, cinemas, theatres, casinos and hairdressers to operate under level 3

- They also need to work
- It's still dangerous
- End lockdown totally

Vote

Results

Previous Results

MONEY MAKEOVER

Turning a business cash flow positive

14 Jun 2020

Create extra income with a side gig

02 Jun

Owning a home can be more pricey than you think. Here are the 'hidden' costs

29 May

Special project

Newsletters

City Press

On a Point of Order

If it's analysis and politics you're after, then this is the newsletter for you. It's the best of City Press, delivered to your inbox every weekday

Choose a newsletter