Despite global economic uncertainty, the Save the Rhino Trust's long-standing donors continued international and national support and k This is according to the organisation's CEO, Simon Uri-Khob, who thanked the SRT team and all partners and donors for their hard work in year.

From April to August, Namibia was in various stages of government-mandated lockdown.

"Throughout this period, our teams continued to patrol the landscape with the aim of collecting population data on the black rhino popul were recorded in the SMART database and rangers logged 88% more kilometres patrolled on foot.

"With the hope that the return to normality will arrive with the roll-out of the coronavirus vaccines, the SRT will continue our collaboration innovating financing," he said.
