Paratus Group launches Paratus 500

>> Expansion

Delivering unmatched cross-border connectivity across 15 African countries south of the equator

STAFF REPORTER

Pan African telecommunications network services provider, Paratus Group, announced the launch of "Paratus 500" – following the Group's expansion into seven additional African markets earlier this year, including Eswatini, Kenya, Malawi, Rwanda, Tanzania, Uganda and Zimbabwe.

Paratus is now licensed to operate in 15 African countries and with this expansion the Group becomes one of the first pan African telcos to cover over 500 million people south of the equator, representing over one-third of Africa's population and gross domestic product (GDP).

Paratus 500 enables Paratus to uniquely connect its 15 licensed operations with a contiguous telecom network across its portfolio. This infrastructure spans diverse terrestrial fiber routes, strategic subsea cable landings and advanced satellite integration, including Starlink, ensuring secure scalable and high-quality connectivity across sub-equatorial Africa.

Reflecting years of sustained investment in infrastructure, local subsidiaries and strategic partnerships, Paratus 500 includes the East West Connect route which stretches from the east coast of Africa in Maputo, through Johannesburg and across Botswana and Namibia, to the west coast of Africa at the Equiano Cable Landing Station in Swakopmund. The Group operates five satellite teleports and maintains nearly 10 000 active satellite services, delivering dependable service across every operating market.

Strategic routes include connections from Johannesburg to Lubumbashi in southern DRC, crossing through Zambia, Zimbabwe and Botswana. In Botswana, Paratus has deployed a diverse fiber network via multiple towns to strengthen national reach and cross border stability.

Subsea cable systems are a key component of the Paratus 500 ecosystem with international landing points from Angola (Luanda), DRC (Kinshasa), France (Marseilles), Kenya (Nairobi), Lisbon (Portugal), London (UK), Mozambique (Maputo), Namibia (Windhoek), South Africa (Pretoria) and Tanzania (Dar es Salaam) delivering direct access to global internet hubs. Paratus also connects across the Atlantic to Brazil (Fortaleza), United States (Miami and New York), Netherlands (Amsterdam) and the United Kingdom (London).

The Paratus Express Route, powered by the Equiano subsea cable, delivers the lowest latency international connectivity from Johannesburg and Namibia to Europe and the USA, offering up to 20 times more capacity than previous West Coast cables.

Strengthening its regional reach yet further, Paratus has integrated LEO (low earth orbit) satellite services into its offering. This technology enhances coverage and ensures consistent connectivity in underserved and remote areas where terrestrial infrastructure is scarce or unavailable.

Schalk Erasmus, Chief Executive Officer of Paratus Group, commented: "With Paratus 500, we now have the most coverage under licence in sub-equatorial Africa, a goal we have worked towards for many years. This milestone enables us to connect people and businesses across the region with reliable, high-quality network services. Our continued investment in fiber, satellite and strategic partnerships empowers us to deliver scalable connectivity solutions to wholesale, enterprise and individual customers – providing the freedom to connect anywhere, anytime."

Paratus 500 is the result of sustained investment in robust infrastructure, local operations and strategic partnerships across the region. This foundation supports seamless connectivity solutions spanning satellite, microwave, WAN and MPLS technologies. Through this expansive network, Paratus delivers resilient, scalable and customer-focused connectivity solutions designed to enable opportunity across the region.

"The Warrior Princess" A Book of Transformation, Healing and Purpose

Ruth Bowa

A powerful voice of resilience, restoration, and divine purpose rang out in Swakopmund this past Saturday as Dioline Cherish, affectionately known as Dio-Ché, launched her highly anticipated second book, From Pauper to Warrior Princess: Predestined with Great Purpose.

The book is a deeply personal chronicle of Dio-Ché's journey through trauma, brokenness, and eventual transformation. More than just a memoir, it is a spiritual roadmap and interactive guide designed to ignite healing, reflection, and purpose in its readers. In "From Pauper to Warrior Princess', Dio-Ché opens her heart and history, chronicling her rise from deep personal despair to a life of meaning and calling. "It's about the message that no matter what you go through, there is purpose in it," she says. "If you just take the lead."

Through poetry, spoken word, evocative artwork, and soul-searching reflections, the book invites readers into an experience that is equal parts confessional and communal.

Each chapter ends with a space for personal reflection, encouraging readers to actively participate in their own healing journeys. "I write because my scars speak life," Dio-Ché shares. "My books, poems, and devotions are offerings of heartbreak, healing, and holy restoration. Every page is a weapon of truth against shame." Her message resounds with raw honesty and spiritual clarity, striking a chord with anyone who has battled inner demons or questioned their worth. Dio-Ché is more than a writer, she's a beauty therapist, poet, and the founder of The Butterfly Emporium, a haven dedicated to holistic healing. With professional diplomas in skincare, holistic massage, and beauty therapy, she brings a unique, integrative approach to wellness that addresses both body and soul. Her professional and spiritual vocations intersect in The Warrior Princess, where inner healing and self-love are given just as much emphasis as spiritual awakening. Her story is marked not just by survival, but by divine redirection and empowerment.

Dioline Cherish the author of From Pauper to Warrior Princess: Predestined with Great Purpose

Though rooted in her own lived experiences, Dio-Ché emphasizes that the book is not just about her. "This story is not solely about the girl behind the pen," she explains. "It's about how every twist in the journey was divinely orchestrated, not just for my healing, but as a weapon of deliverance in the hands of God."

"From Pauper to Warrior Princess' carries a universal message. It's a clarion call to all, women and men, young and old, inviting them to believe in the power of transformation, no matter how dark the beginning may have been. Launched with grace and purpose, The Warrior Princess is already being celebrated as more than a book, it's a movement. A mirror for the broken, a balm for the bruised, and a battle cry for the brave. For those ready to confront their hidden valleys and rise into their own purpose, Dio-Ché's latest offering stands as a torch in the dark: bold, beautiful, and un-flinchingly true. Namibia's Mid-Year Budget Review Signals Deeper Fiscal Concerns

Filson van der Schyff

Investment analyst Kara van den Heever from Momentum Investments says that while Namibia's 2025 Mid-Year Budget Review paints a picture of calm and stability, the underlying numbers tell a more sobering story. "At first glance, it reads like a story of calm seas and steady hands," Van den Heever noted.

"Revenue forecasts are holding firm, spending remains within budget, and the reshuffling of funds between departments has been contained. On paper, it looks optimistic." However, she cautioned that beneath the surface, warning signs are emerging. Namibia's GDP growth forecast has been revised downward, from 4.5% to 3.3%, a shift that may seem small, but carries serious implications. "Slower growth means less money flowing into state coffers and increasing pressure on central bank reserves," she explained. "Revenue collection is at its weakest point in a decade, with an execution rate of just 39.6%, compared to the 10-year average of nearly 50%."

According to Van den Heever, the government is seeking new ways to bridge the gap, including proposals for a sugar tax, dividend tax, and stricter tax enforcement. While these may help in the short term, she believes they are not lasting solutions. "Right now, Namibia's revenue performance leans heavily on global demand for gold and uranium," she said. "These are driven by international uncertainty, not by domestic strength. Commodity booms are temporary — they come and go — and they're not a solid base for long-term fiscal planning." Van den Heever emphasized that what Namibia truly needs is growth from within, through new businesses, job creation, and a stronger private sector that can naturally expand the tax base. "The government's decision to hire over 1 500 medical professionals and 665 education staff is commendable," she said, "but the long-term health of our economy depends on reigniting private investment. That engine is currently idling." On the expenditure side, spending has been slightly trimmed, mostly through cuts in development allocations. Yet, she warned that the country's debt obligations are becoming increasingly heavy. "Interest payments have been revised upward to N$14.4 billion from N$13.7 billion, while domestic borrowing has risen to N$22.3 billion," she said. "Namibia's debt-to-GDP ratio now stands at 67.5%, and it's expected to climb to 69% next year. Debt, once a quiet concern, is now becoming a louder presence." Van den Heever also pointed to the Ministry of Finance's plan to move away from relying mainly on bond issuance, instead using state guarantees to support commercially viable state-owned enterprises (SOEs).

While she sees the logic in diversifying funding sources, she urged caution. "We've walked this path before, Air Namibia serves as a clear reminder," she said.

"Without strong governance and realistic planning, these interventions can offer short-term relief without solving long-term structural issues. "In closing, Van den Heever said the Mid-Year Budget Review sends a clear message: optimism is welcome, but realism is overdue. "With revenue slipping and expenditure quietly creeping upward, debt will continue to rise," she warned.

"We're not heading for an immediate crisis, but the storm clouds are gathering again. It's time to steady the ship before the next wave hits."

Strides for Food

Tutaleni Primary School principal, Neville Visagie, successfully completed a 35-kilometre walk from Swakopmund to Walvis Bay to raise funds for the school's soup kitchen and feeding scheme.

The initiative, themed "Walking for Purpose," aims to upgrade the school's kitchen facilities, construct a dining hall, and enhance the feeding programme to provide more nutritious meals for learners. Tutaleni Primary School in Kuisebmond currently serves around 1 680 learners, of whom more than 600 benefit from the school's feeding scheme.

Visagie began his journey early this morning and arrived at the school about an hour ago, where he was welcomed with cheers, applause, and song from staff, learners, and community members. "This walk is not just about raising funds; it's about raising awareness," said Visagie. "No child should have to go through a school day hungry. We want to give every learner the energy and focus they need to succeed."

As part of the broader fundraising campaign, the school also hosted a braai event to rally additional community support. So far, the initiative has raised N$20 000 through parent contributions, with each family donating N$20 per learner. Funds collected will go towards revamping the soup kitchen, improving facilities, and upgrading the menu to ensure that all learners receive healthy, balanced meals each day. Visagie's initiative has drawn widespread praise across the Erongo Region, with many hailing it as a shining example of community-driven action to combat hunger and support education.
