waxab's signature across all denominations.
"The issuance of currency is a sovereign act, enshrined in Article 128(1) of the Namibian Constitution and further articulated in Section 38(1) of the Bank of Namibia Act", !Gawaxab said of the need to launch the modified banknote.

"These legal provisions are the legal scaffolding upon which the stability of our economy rests. However, our mandate goes beyond mere issuance. It encompasses the safeguarding of value, the deterrence of counterfeiting and the maintenance of public trust," he said.

Detering counterfeiting

The modification also aimed to counter instances where the unscrupulous characters would attempt to create fake banknotes.

"In terms of safeguarding our currency from counterfeiting, it is equally significant to note a 10.7% decline in counterfeit currency is a matter of public trust and institutional credibility," !Gawaxab said.

"When citizens know that the currency they hold is secure, they transact with confidence, and that confidence is the bedrock of economic activity. Therefore, the issuance of secure, high-quality currency is a strategic imperative," he added.

According to !Gawaxab, the has systematically upgraded four key denominations: the N$10, N$20, N$100, and N$200 notes. Today, we complete this cycle with the unveiling of the modified N$50 banknote, which is a proactive response to evolving market demands. Our forthcoming comprehensive review of the national currency, is scheduled to be launched in three months," he said.

WATCH: Bank of Namibia governor Johannes !Gawaxab says the launch of the N$50 banknote is as a consequence of demand for the denomination, and said it was not merely done for the sake of adding a signature.
